

When the World Turns to White

So many lies, misconceptions and signs
Like fingerprints at the scene of the crime
This is our prize, our black legacy
The brooding thoughts of an untamed mind - Falling, crying...

Dress the old world in diamonds and dreams
Wipe darkness away let the innocent breathe
It is clean and virgin, free from guilt
And the sins of our fathers – sins of our lives
Sins of our fathers – sins of our lives

I can see it - But it's only there when I close my eyes to you
I can see it - But it's only real when thy hide me from the truth

The blanket is stretched over jealousy, over greed
Hard, genuine honesty never touched never seen
Bleeds into those darkest corners - Reaches to the night
With my mind sharply focused - I can watch you create a new life

Conciliatory promises - Keeps those feelings at bay
A verbal preventative medicine
Made for the moment – saving the day
Creeps into those secret places - Reaches to the light
From the farthest shores and islands - I can watch the world turn to white

Keeping one step ahead, staying one step behind
I can go on reading
The warnings and threats - They're hidden between all the lines

Forced into conscious thought - Dragged into sight
Disregarding ancient laws - I can watch the world turn to white

I can see it - But it's only there when I close my eyes to you
I can see it - But it's only real when thy hide me from the truth

When the world turns to white
There's an end to the bruises and scars - And the fear in your heart

When the world turns to white - There's an end to corruption of time
And the fall of mankind

When the world turns to white
We forget the insatiable craving - For hatred and lies

When the world turns to white
We forget that the primeval yearning for violence is rising again

I can see it - But it's only there when I close my eyes to you
I can see it - But it's only real when thy hide me from the truth
